Countryside Veterinary Clinic and Dairy Health & Management Services to Sponsor Genomics Informational Meeting

Have you ever wondered about utilizing new technology in your dairy herd? While some farms have taken advantage of genomic testing, many have not. A great opportunity to learn more about cost effective genomic testing will take place later next month at the Lowville clinic. (Sam Farnham)

A research and extension team from University of Idaho, Washington State University, University of Missouri, USDA-ARS, and University of Florida, will be offering a Dairy Cattle Genomics Workshop Monday July 31 in Lowville. The focus of the workshop is to provide dairy producers, veterinarians, and allied industry with knowledge and tools to make decisions regarding the use of genomic testing. Experience with genomics is not required.

Topics to be discussed:

“Genomics and fertility research updates,” Genomic testing: Where is the greatest economic value?” and “Where do we go from here?”

The workshop will be held Monday July 31 at Countryside Veterinary Clinic in Lowville from 7:00 pm to 8:30 p.m.

The workshop is made possible through USDA-NIFA-AFRI grant 2013-68004-20365 and through collaboration with Countryside Veterinary Clinic.

Please call Lowville office at 315-376-6563 to reserve a space.
